

PhD course: Theorizing subjectivities, ecological concerns, and everyday practices

Challenges of doing planetary justice

This 3-day course is designed for international PhD students from all fields to explore the planetary (individual, social, societal, and ecological) impact of their research projects, emphasizing theoretical innovation and practical relevance. The course tackles challenges of bridging the theory-practice gap in addressing agency and environmental justice in everyday life, and it aims to enhance participants' theoretical tools for their research endeavors.

Teachers: Laure Kloetzer (Neuchâtel University)
Luca Tateo (University of Oslo)
Niklas A. Chimirri (Roskilde University)

Questions?
chimirri@ruc.dk

Where: Roskilde University

When: December 9-11, 2026

Registration deadline: October 30, 2026 (first come first served)

To complete your registration, you will need to upload a 3-5 page assignment by Nov. 25

More info: Register and read more at <https://study.ruc.dk/class/view/40986>

(if your institution is member of the Open Market Agreement for PhD courses in Denmark, participation is free)